1. Jakljan Island is situated southwest of Sipanj Island. A state farm was located on the island until the spring of 1950, at which time, the farm was deserted, leaving only a watchman and his family. During the last months of 1950, a military commission often visited the island, taking measurements, especially in that part known as Katine Staje (Catherine's Stables). Preparations were made to build fortifications in 1951.
2. Jakljan Island is important because, together with the western part of Mljet Island, it closes the Mljet canal. In the spring of 1950, a cable station was constructed on the southeastern cape know as Jedribok. The station is connected by submarine cable to the new cable station on Sipanj Island. The station also has its own telephone cable connecting it with Sv. Izidor Chapel, as well as with the only (sic) building on the island. Both the chapel and this house are located in the fairly large Kalera valley.
